Some French "Bulls."
Some amusing instances of French "bulls" are given by "T. P." The following is said to have been observed on a Paris shop:
"Fabrique des Meubles Anciens," had not far from it, on the same street, the sign:
"Reparation des Bebes Incassables."
The following verbal "bull" is credited to a Frenchman who, while promoting with a friend, noticed a passing cart drawn by a pair of horses, one black and the other white.
"Look," said one, "you don't often see a pure white horse and a pure black one harnessed together."
"That's so," was the response. "Do you know why the black horse is on the near side?"
"Why they always put the horse that isn't the same color as the other on the near side."—Harper's Weekly.

Sleeps Outdoors in All Weathers.
Rev. Dr. John Clendennin, a son-in-law of Horace Greeley, believes he owes his life to living out of doors day and night. When he took up his abode in the open last September he was thin and emaciated and had a bad cough, but from the time he began sleeping out of doors he began to show improvement and now he feels he has been cured. During the last six months Dr. Clendennin has practically lived in the open, spending but little more time within doors than it takes to eat. He drives during the day or indulges in long rambles, but he sleeps on a balcony in the third story of his house.

Soule's East Boston Senator.
Ex-President Soule of the Massachusetts senate is very fond of telling a story about a young Irish member of the senate from East Boston, who, during a debate in that body on the East Boston grade crossing question, took the floor and argued very energetically in favor of abolishing the crossing. The senator was more than a little surprised when with a proper construction of sentences, in the height of his argument he exclaimed:
"Why, Mr. President, there are people now living in East Boston who have been killed over and over again on that crossing."

Most Valued of English Orders.
The Garter which has been conferred on the Mikado has its material magnificence as well as its tangible significance. The Garter is set with diamonds and the Star of the Order is in diamonds, and the George, which is the pendant to the collar of the Order, is carved in onyx and set round with brilliants. The cost is something well over $5,000.—London Telegraph.

WANTED TO MAKE HEAVY BET.
ack McAuliffe Went High in the Animal Scale.
"When Val-d'Or won the Prix Montreuil at Maisons-Laffitte, near Paris, not long ago," said Francis Breckinridge Douglas, a breeder of thoroughbreds at Lexington, Ky., "I heard the most remarkable wages ever offered on a horse. I happened to be near Representative Timothy D. Sullivan of New York, and his party of Americans. The French bookmakers have borrowed English slang betting terms, but they have changed the values. A 'pony' is 500 francs, and a 'monkey' is 12,500 francs.
"In the hearing of our party, William K. Vanderbilt bet a 'monkey' on Val-d'Or, and William Duke, his trainer, laid a 'pony' on the same horse. Mr. Sullivan's friend, Jack McAuliffe, the former lightweight pugilist champion of the world, liked another horse. Also he heard the 'pony' and 'monkey' bets. With his cigar tucked up in the left corner of his mouth, Jack strode up to the French bookies, pointed at the card and commanded:
"Here! I'll bet you an elephant on my horse, Finasseur."

Not a Policeman.
Gen. Lee, commanding the Department of Texas, tells a good story upon himself.
Leaving his office one afternoon after closing hours, he was stopped at a sally port by one of a large number of visitors attracted to San Antonio by the recent fair.
"Will you please tell what car I take to the Springs?" asked the damsel.
The General paused, and, with his customary courtesy, removed his hat before replying that he was not very familiar with the destinations of the various car lines.
"But you ought to know," said his inquisitor, allowing something of impatience to appear in her tone. "Ain't you a policeman?"
The General replied sadly that "at one time in his life he had aspirations to become a member of the force, but he feared it was too late."

A Hint for the Earl.
The new Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, the Earl of Aberdeen, who owns about 63,000 acres of land in Scotland, is fond of telling this story.
He was once walking out in a country district where he had rarely been before, and paused beside a cottage garden fence to watch an old laborer at work.
"Is this a good soil?" he questioned.
"Aye," responded the other.
"What is your next crop to be?" was another interrogation.
The worker looked up and gazed disapprovingly at the stranger, and finally remarked:
"You don't know anything about crops, young man. Just hire a nice little allotment somewhere and take to cultivating it, and you'll have something better to do than to come interuptin' busy folk!"

Making Gunsmiths.
The gunsmith laid down his paper, which contained an article about a burglar's capture, an heiress.
"Business will be good to-day," said "This burglar's capture by armed young woman will have a long effect on the revolver trade."
"All householders feel that for protection they should have revolvers handy, but they put off visiting the gunsmith, as one puts off getting teeth filled. It takes an episode like this to recall them to their duty. They perceive that the heiress, because she had a revolver, saved herself so thousands of dollars in silver and jewels. Accordingly, they hurry to right shop and invest in a reliable weapon."
"A good newspaper account of burglar's repulse by an armed householder has often, to my knowledge, quadrupled that day's gun and revolver sales."
The man smiled.
"In fact, I might say," he ended, "that burglars are our best revolver salesmen."

The Tragedy of Ex-Presidents.
This story was told by Corporal Tanner, who has seen many presidents and knows much about them.
"On the 6th of March, 1885, I came on ex-President Arthur, who had just quit Washington and was staying at the house of his Secretary of State, Mr. Frelinghuysen. To my intense surprise Mr. Arthur, when he learned that my visit was only a personal and friendly one, was so affected that tears came in his eyes.
"Tanner," he said, "I never before knew the tragedy of the ex-President. Until noon of the 4th of March men were crowding each other for the privilege of speaking to me. I was treated with profound deference and sought by everybody. Since that hour I have been alone and neglected. Tanner, you are the first man who has called upon me since noon of the 4th of March."—New York Times.

New Ambulance Was at Work.
An exclusive hospital, where money alone can obtain treatment for a patient, recently added an automobile ambulance to its equipment.
Shortly after the machine had been installed the directors held a meeting and listened to reports from the physicians in charge. The new ambulance was doing good service. It was superior, more expeditious and more comfortable than the old two-horse affair.
The officials then examined the books, and indignantly questioned the man in charge concerning several entries under the head "Free Patients."
"There are county institutions where all such cases can find accommodations," roared the chairman indignantly.
The others sternly nodded assent.
"It was cheaper to attend them here," explained the physician in charge, "for they were run over by our new ambulance."—Houston Post.

A Remarkable Criminal.
A rather better man than Jack Sheppard died a couple of years ago in the person of John Gillespie. Called the King of lock-pickers, he was a cunning man, equal to all sorts of deceptions. Crime at Wigan brought him to the gallows. Before the noose could be placed about his neck he began to kick and struggle and to foam at the mouth. The authorities thought him about to die, and sentence was commuted. Soapbuds had done the trick. But the dying man made so excellent a recovery that on the way to the infirmary he was able to spring up and escape. Many times after that he was in and out of prison. The warders were always glad to see the shadow of him. He could pick any lock, stealing from his cell at night, he would make his way to the governor's house, ransack his wine cellar, and share his booty with the other prisoners. He was converted in the end, and died poor but penitent in Carlisle Workhouse.—St. James Gazette.

Only One Spider to Be Found.
In the early days of my housekeeping in Melrose as a minister's wife I had great difficulty in procuring help," says a writer in the Boston Herald. "There was no Catholic church in the town then, and only the new arrivals, in the droves of the intelligence offices, would go so far from Boston.
"Bridget Rooney, whose training in the fields hardly fitted her for the kitchen, was taken directly from the steamer, and served only to supplement tired feet.
"Go to the cellar-way, Bridget, and bring me the spider hanging there," said I, the first day, while preparing breakfast. She was long absent, but I last, after several calls, appeared holding by its legs a little struggling spider, saying, in her delightful brogue: "Sure, mam, it's arl over the cellar I hunted, and this is the only one I could find, and him but a smart one."
